over a long period of time." I knew that I was treading on very sensitive ground but decided nevertheless to proceed with that line of reasoning. John listened well and we had a very serious and direct conversation about living & working & freedom. My central point was — we must work, not necessarily to get money, <sup>to serve immediate ends</sup> but to buy free time. I further elaborated my thesis that there can be no greater luxury than to have all the time one needs to do what one wants to do. In addition, I explained that most people are frightened by free time (Jack Bernier, for example) and do not want <sup>very much</sup> free time. "That's why most people are 'bored' on Sunday — they have run out of things to do in just one day, Saturday, and they are ready to go back to work on Monday." I will bring <sup>again</sup> up the subject of Job's master plan for the next five years.

We also talked about John's moving out of 46 Canaan. Job is very uneasy about moving into 190 because of the fact that he does not have winter transportation, the fact that I do not have what Job regards as adequate heat, and the fact that I do not have a shower & a flush toilet. Job, in spite of his cherished notion of himself as a pioneer, is rather bourgeois when it comes to creature comforts, i.e., the standard bourgeois creature comforts such as they are indulged in by his parents and by RTP and family. I encouraged John not to be hasty in moving out of 46 Canaan — "Don't make enemies of your parents when you move out." He seemed pleased to hear me recommend slowness in moving out. Job is so pleased because he has not yet convinced himself that he can survive at 190. My guess at the moment is that John will not move into 190 this fall/winter. On vera.
